You need to know, that I know for a fact that you have been in constant communication with your first love — Pushpa — for months

After discovering this I have gone through a no of emotions — betrayal, disgust, shock, helplessness and panic. I am devastated, feel cheated and violated. I feel like a fool. I have hardly slept since you left. As much as I find it hard to believe, you have done this. I am managing to come to grips with it.

We both agreed to give up our retirement home, I had so looked forward to living there even before I had seen it. When I saw the place in 1997 Feb, it was so beautiful — more than I ever imagined. It broke my heart to give it up, even more. We made a decision to build and sell, only because it would be so uncomfortable, being and living close to this woman.

In spite of this, I have found how you have carried on with this relationship without due regard to my feelings — not your wife of 33 years. It's absolutely mind-boggling. You have so masterfully hidden it from me. My faith in you is completely shattered. After what has happened, I will always question the TRUTH and sincerity of actions and words

I cannot bear to live with you, under conditions you have created. I cannot even face you.

In life there are no coincidences. I do believe then God has brought you two together. Your passion for this woman probably never left your heart. She is divorced and that probably made it easier for you.

I hope in future, we will be able to communicate as friends, for the sake of our two wonderful children.

I have no intention of telling them anything on phone. DEE is in state of transition. I hope and pray you won't either. They need to be told, about this, face to face at one time.

Best wishes

Zubir
